BILL SUMMARY

- Revises the provision that provides Ohio with criminal jurisdiction regarding certain conspiracies that occur in Ohio to commit an offense in another jurisdiction to specify that, regarding conspiracy, a person is subject to criminal prosecution in Ohio if, while in Ohio, the person conspires to commit an offense in another jurisdiction, which offense is an offense under both the laws of Ohio and the other jurisdiction, and a "substantial overt act" in furtherance of the conspiracy is undertaken in Ohio by the person or another person involved in the conspiracy, subsequent to the person's entrance into the conspiracy.
- Specifies that, for purposes of the provision described in the preceding dot point, an overt act is substantial when it is of a character that manifests a purpose on the part of the actor that the object of the conspiracy should be completed.
- Specifies that, in any case in which a person attempts to commit, is guilty of complicity in the commission of, or conspires to commit an offense in another jurisdiction, as described in the provision that provides Ohio with criminal jurisdiction regarding certain attempts, complicities, or conspiracies that occur in Ohio to commit an offense in another jurisdiction as modified by the bill, the person is subject to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio for the attempt, complicity, or conspiracy, and for any resulting offense that is committed or completed in the other jurisdiction.

- Modifies the existing provision that specifies that, in homicide, the element occurring in Ohio that subjects the offender to Ohio criminal jurisdiction is either the act that causes death, or the physical contact that causes death, or the death itself to instead specify that, in homicide, the element includes the act that causes death, the physical contact that causes death, the death itself, or any other element that is set forth in the offense in question.
- Specifies that, when a person is subject to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio for an offense committed or completed outside of Ohio, the person is subject to all specifications for that offense that would be applicable if the offense had been committed within this state.
- Specifies that any act, conduct, or element that is a basis of a person being subject under the criminal jurisdiction statute to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio need not be committed personally by the person as long as it is committed by another person who is in complicity or conspiracy with the person.
- Specifies that the criminal jurisdiction section must be liberally construed, consistent with constitutional limitations, to allow Ohio the broadest possible jurisdiction over offenses and persons committing offenses in, or affecting, Ohio.
- In the existing provision that specifies venue for a case when the offense is conspiracy, attempt, or complicity occurring in Ohio that results in an offense being committed outside of Ohio and when Ohio has jurisdiction over the offense and the offender, adds new language that specifies that, if an offense resulted outside Ohio from the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity, that offense also may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the conspiracy, attempt, complicity, or any of the elements of the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity occurred.
- States that the General Assembly declares that it intends by the amendments made in the bill to prospectively overrule the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court in State v. Yarbrough (2004), 104 Ohio St.3d 1.

CONTENT AND OPERATION

Criminal jurisdiction

Existing law

Existing law provides that a person is subject to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio if any of the following occur: (1) the person commits an offense under the laws of Ohio, any element of which takes place in Ohio (see the next paragraph), (2) while in Ohio, the person conspires or attempts to commit, or is guilty of complicity in the commission of, an offense in another jurisdiction, which offense is an offense under both the laws of this state and the other jurisdiction (hereafter, this clause is referred to as the "Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis"), (3) while out of Ohio, the person conspires or attempts to commit, or is guilty of complicity in the commission of, an offense in Ohio, (4) while out of this state, the person omits to perform a legal duty imposed by the laws of Ohio, which omission affects a legitimate interest of the state in protecting, governing, or regulating any person, property, thing, transaction, or activity in Ohio, (5) while out of Ohio, the person unlawfully takes or retains property and subsequently brings any of the unlawfully taken or retained property into Ohio, (6) while out of Ohio, the person unlawfully takes or entices another and subsequently brings the other person into Ohio, or (7) the person, by means of a computer, computer system, computer network, telecommunication, telecommunications device, telecommunications service, or information service, causes or knowingly permits any writing, data, image, or other telecommunication to be disseminated or transmitted into Ohio in violation of Ohio law (see COMMENT).

Existing law specifies that in homicide, the element referred to in clause (1) of the preceding paragraph (i.e., the element that takes place in Ohio) is either the act that causes death, or the physical contact that causes death, or the death itself, and that, if any part of the body of a homicide victim is found in Ohio, the death is presumed to have occurred within Ohio (see COMMENT). (R.C. 2901.11(A) and (B).)

For purposes of the existing criminal jurisdiction provisions, "Ohio" includes the land and water within its boundaries and the air space above that land and water, with respect to which Ohio has either exclusive or concurrent legislative jurisdiction. Where the boundary between Ohio and another state or foreign country is disputed, the disputed territory is conclusively presumed to be within Ohio for purposes of the criminal jurisdiction section. Existing law gives the courts of common pleas of Adams, Athens, Belmont, Brown, Clermont, Columbiana, Gallia, Hamilton, Jefferson, Lawrence, Meigs, Monroe, Scioto, and

Washington counties jurisdiction beyond the north or northwest shore of the Ohio river extending to the opposite shore line, between the extended boundary lines of any adjacent counties or adjacent state. It specifies that each of those courts of common pleas has concurrent jurisdiction on the Ohio river with any adjacent court of common pleas that borders on that river and with any court of Kentucky or of West Virginia that borders on the Ohio river and that has jurisdiction on the Ohio river under Kentucky or West Virginia law, whichever is applicable, or under federal law. (R.C. 2901.11(C).)

Finally, existing law specifies that, when an offense is committed under the laws of Ohio, and it appears beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense or any element of the offense took place either in Ohio or in another jurisdiction or jurisdictions, but it cannot reasonably be determined in which it took place, the offense or element is conclusively presumed to have taken place in Ohio for purposes of the criminal jurisdiction section (R.C. 2901.11(D)).

Operation of the bill

The bill modifies the provisions that set forth Ohio's criminal jurisdiction in the following ways:

(1) It revises the Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis, as described above in clause (1) of the first paragraph under "Existing law," as it relates to conspiracy (it retains the existing language as it related to attempt and complicity), and also adds new language to that basis regarding conspiracy, attempt, and complicity. Under the bill, regarding conspiracy, a person is subject to criminal prosecution in Ohio if, while in Ohio, the person conspires to commit an offense in another jurisdiction, which offense is an offense under both the laws of Ohio and the other jurisdiction, and a "substantial overt act" (see below) in furtherance of the conspiracy is undertaken in Ohio by the person or another person involved in the conspiracy, subsequent to the person's entrance into the conspiracy. Regarding conspiracy, attempt, and complicity, the bill specifies that, in any case in which a person attempts to commit, is guilty of complicity in the commission of, or conspires to commit an offense in another jurisdiction as described in the general Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis as modified by the bill, the person is subject to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio for the attempt, complicity, or conspiracy and for any resulting offense that is committed or completed in the other jurisdiction. The bill specifies that, for purposes of the provisions described in this paragraph, an overt act is substantial when it is of a character that manifests a purpose on the part of the actor that the object of the conspiracy should be completed. (R.C. 2901.11(A)(2) and (H).)

(2) It modifies the existing provision that specifies that in homicide, the element referred to in clause (1) of the first paragraph under "Existing law" is either the act that causes death, or the physical contact that causes death, or the death itself to expand the events listed to include "any other element set forth in the offense in question" and to specify that the element includes the events listed. Specifically, under the bill, the provision states that, in homicide, the element referred to in clause (1) includes the act that causes death, the physical contact that causes death, the death itself, or any other element that is set forth in the offense in question. The bill does not change the provision that states that, if any part of the body of a homicide victim is found in Ohio, the death is presumed to have occurred within Ohio. (R.C. 2901.11(B).)

(3) It enacts a provision that specifies that, when a person is subject to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio for an offense committed or completed outside of Ohio, the person is subject to all specifications for that offense (e.g., specifications for capital punishment aggravating circumstances set forth in R.C. 2929.04(A), specifications for firearm mandatory sentences set forth in R.C. 2929.14(D)(1), and specifications for repeat violent offender sentences set forth in R.C. 2929.14(D)(2)) that would be applicable if the offense had been committed within this state (R.C. 2901.11(E)).

(4) It enacts a provision that specifies that any act, conduct, or element that is a basis of a person being subject under the criminal jurisdiction section to criminal prosecution and punishment in Ohio need not be committed personally by the person as long as it is committed by another person who is in complicity or conspiracy with the person (R.C. 2901.11(F)).

(5) It enacts a provision that specifies that the criminal jurisdiction section must be liberally construed, consistent with constitutional limitations, to allow Ohio the broadest possible jurisdiction over offenses and persons committing offenses in, or affecting, Ohio (R.C. 2901.11(G)).

Venue for a trial in a criminal case

Existing law

Existing law provides that the trial of a criminal case in Ohio must be held in a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, and in the territory of which the offense or any element of the offense was committed (R.C. 2901.12(A)). It also provides the following more detailed rules that govern offenses occurring in specified circumstances or specified types of offenses (R.C. 2901.12(B) to (J)):

(1) When the offense or any element of the offense was committed in an aircraft, motor vehicle, train, watercraft, or other vehicle, in transit, and it cannot reasonably be determined in which jurisdiction the offense was committed, the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction through which the aircraft, motor vehicle, train, watercraft, or other vehicle passed.

(2) When the offense involved the unlawful taking or receiving of property or the unlawful taking or enticing of another, the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction from which or into which the property or victim was taken, received, or enticed.

(3) When the offense is conspiracy, attempt, or complicity cognizable under the Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis described above in "Existing law" under "Criminal jurisdiction," the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the conspiracy, attempt, complicity, or any of its elements occurred.

(4) When the offense is conspiracy or attempt occurring outside of Ohio that is within the criminal jurisdiction of Ohio as described above in "Existing law" under "Criminal jurisdiction," the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the offense that was the object of the conspiracy or attempt, or any element of that offense, was intended to or could have taken place. When the offense is complicity occurring outside of Ohio that is within the criminal jurisdiction of Ohio as described above, the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the principal offender may be tried.

(5) When an offense is considered to have been committed in Ohio while the offender was out of Ohio, and the jurisdiction in Ohio in which the offense or any material element of the offense was committed is not reasonably ascertainable, the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the offense or element reasonably could have been committed.

(6) When it appears beyond a reasonable doubt that an offense or any element of an offense was committed in any of two or more jurisdictions, but it cannot reasonably be determined in which jurisdiction the offense or element was committed, the offender may be tried in any of those jurisdictions.

(7) When an offender, as part of a course of criminal conduct, commits offenses in different jurisdictions, the offender may be tried for all of those offenses in any jurisdiction in which one of those offenses or any element of one of those offenses occurred. Without limitation on the evidence that may be used to establish the course of criminal conduct, any of the following is prima-facie evidence of a course of criminal conduct: (a) the offenses involved the same victim, or victims of the same type or from the same group, (b) the offenses were committed by the offender in the offender's same employment, or capacity, or relationship to another, (c) the offenses were committed as part of the same transaction or chain of events, or in furtherance of the same purpose or objective,

(d) the offenses were committed in furtherance of the same conspiracy, (e) the offenses involved the same or a similar modus operandi, or (f) the offenses were committed along the offender's line of travel in Ohio, regardless of the offender's point of origin or destination.

(8) When the offense involves a computer, computer system, computer network, telecommunication, telecommunications device, telecommunications service, or information service, the offender may be tried in any jurisdiction containing any location of the computer, computer system, or computer network of the victim of the offense, in any jurisdiction from which or into which, as part of the offense, any writing, data, or image is disseminated or transmitted by means of a computer, computer system, computer network, telecommunication, telecommunications device, telecommunications service, or information service, or in any jurisdiction in which the alleged offender commits any activity that is an essential part of the offense.

(9) When the offense involves the death of a person, and it cannot reasonably be determined in which jurisdiction the offense was committed, the offender may be tried in the jurisdiction in which the dead person's body or any part of the dead person's body was found.

Under existing law, notwithstanding any other requirement for the place of trial, venue may be changed, upon motion of the prosecution, the defense, or the court, to any court having jurisdiction of the subject matter outside the county in which trial otherwise would be held, when it appears that a fair and impartial trial cannot be held in the jurisdiction in which trial otherwise would be held, or when it appears that trial should be held in another jurisdiction for the convenience of the parties and in the interests of justice (R.C. 2901.12(K)).

Operation of the bill

The bill modifies one of the provisions that set forth the venue for trials of criminal cases. It adds new language to the existing provision that specifies venue for a case when the offense is conspiracy, attempt, or complicity cognizable under the Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis described above in "Existing law" under "Criminal jurisdiction." The new language specifies that, if an offense resulted outside Ohio from the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity, that offense also may be tried in any jurisdiction in which the conspiracy, attempt, complicity, or any of the elements of the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity occurred. Thus, under the bill, if Ohio has jurisdiction over an offense and offender under the Ohio conspiracy/attempt/complicity jurisdictional basis, the offender may be tried for the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity that occurred in Ohio in any jurisdiction in which the conspiracy, attempt, complicity, or any of its elements occurred, and may be tried for an offense that was committed outside of

Ohio but resulted from the Ohio conspiracy, attempt, or complicity in any jurisdiction in which the conspiracy, attempt, complicity, or any of the elements of the conspiracy, attempt, or complicity occurred. (R.C. 2901.12(D).)

Intent of General Assembly in enacting the bill

The bill states that the General Assembly declares that it intends by the amendments made in the bill to prospectively overrule the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court in State v. Yarbrough (2004), 104 Ohio St.3d 1 (see COMMENT). (Section 3.)

COMMENT

In State v. Yarbrough (2004), 104 Ohio St.3d 1, the Ohio Supreme Court addressed the application of the Ohio criminal venue statute to a case involving multi-state criminal conduct. Briefly, in Yarbrough, the defendant and an accomplice kidnapped two students in Ohio, stole their car, committed other related crimes in Ohio, drove the students to Pennsylvania, and killed the students while in Pennsylvania. The defendant and the accomplice were charged in Ohio for all the crimes, including the homicides that they committed in Pennsylvania (the homicide charges were aggravated murder charges under Ohio law, with the defendant's charges including death penalty specifications of multiple aggravating circumstances). The defendant was convicted of the aggravated murder and the death penalty specifications and sentenced to death; he also was convicted of many of the other offenses and received a total prison sentence of 59 years for those crimes. In Yarbrough, the Supreme Court vacated the defendant's convictions of aggravated murder and dismissed those charges for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction in Ohio under R.C. 2901.11, which sets forth the criminal jurisdiction of Ohio. The Court let stand the convictions of the defendant of the other offenses and the resulting 59-year prison sentence.

In Yarbrough, the Court identified several reasons why it believed that the language of R.C. 2901.11 did not give Ohio jurisdiction over the homicides in the case that occurred in Pennsylvania. It then stated that the Ohio Constitution gives the General Assembly the power to decide the scope of the jurisdiction of the common pleas courts, that (in R.C. 2901.11) the General Assembly chose to set special limits on the power of those courts to hear homicide cases, and that the Court must respect that choice, for its role was "to interpret, not legislate." A summary of the reasons given, and the determinations made, by the Court in Yarbrough follows:

(1) First, the Court held that the "any element" provision of R.C. 2901.11(A)(1), which specifies that a person may be tried for an offense in Ohio if the person commits any element of the offense within Ohio's boundaries, did not apply in the case. In arriving at this determination, the Court stated that: (a) R.C. 2901.11(B), which describes "the element" referred to in R.C. 2901.11(A)(1) for homicide cases, narrows the scope of the "any element" provision in homicide cases to "either the act that causes death, or the physical contact that causes death, or the death itself," (b) although the felony portion of the aggravated murder charges against the defendant in the case occurred in Ohio (i.e., the kidnapping, robbery, etc.), undisputed evidence established that the two victims were killed in Pennsylvania, and (c) the act causing the deaths, the physical contact causing the deaths, and the deaths themselves all occurred in Pennsylvania and, as a result, under a plain reading of R.C. 2901.11, Ohio did not have statutory jurisdiction over the homicides of the two victims.

(2) Second, the Court stated that R.C. 2901.11 does not include a "course of conduct" provision that grants Ohio jurisdiction over a criminal offense that occurs outside of Ohio but that is part of a "course of conduct" including one or more offense committed in Ohio. The Court noted that the prosecutor and trial judge in the case apparently applied a portion of R.C. 2901.12, the state's venue statute, that includes "course of conduct" language as the purported basis of Ohio's jurisdiction in the case, but the Court stated that this application was erroneous because R.C. 2901.12 does not grant criminal jurisdiction to Ohio but presupposes that the state has jurisdiction to try a case and is irrelevant if the state does not have that jurisdiction.

(3) Third, the Court determined that the complicity provision of R.C. 2901.11(A), which specifies that a person may be tried in Ohio for an offense the person commits in another jurisdiction if, while in Ohio, the person is guilty of complicity in the commission of the offense in the other jurisdiction, which offense is an offense under both the laws of Ohio and the other jurisdiction, did not apply in the case. In arriving at this determination, the Court again referred to R.C. 2901.11(B), holding that: (a) R.C. 2901.11(B) is an "express and distinct provision governing jurisdiction in homicide prosecutions" that "trumps the general language in the statute about Ohio courts' jurisdiction to hear conspiracy, attempt, and complicity charges involving myriad crimes," and (b) under R.C. 2901.11, a murderer acting alone who plans his or her crime in Ohio but carries it out in another state cannot be tried in Ohio for the crime, the Court could "find nothing in the statutes that would produce a different result when the murderer plans the crime in Ohio with others before leaving the state to commit the homicide itself," and the "state is not permitted, in other words, to evade the express jurisdictional limit on homicide cases by recasting a homicide case as a complicity-to-commit homicide case."
